

2009 Season Preview Series Vol. 1.2

Believers need to make run while window is open!

Our next team is clearly in the mix to make a run in the OFC once again this year after making a strong push in 2008 before they came across the red hot Teeelers last year.

Clearly the team's window to compete for an AFC division title is starting to narrow as the team will be faced with many difficult decisions the next few years as several key players could be heading to RFA. The team will be without 2008 MVP candidate Kurt Warner who was traded to the Mudhawks this offseason. The Believers will turn to Aaron Rodgers and Matt Schaub to man the ship in 2009.

The Believers feature one of the league's oldest starting tandems at RB in Jamal Lewis and Thomas Jones. They don't have much behind those two either so this should be an area of high focus at the 2009 draft.

WR is one of the team's strong points with Randy Moss, Lee Evans and newcomers Chris Henry and Michael Jenkins all expected to make major contributions to the team in 2009. They also feature one of the league's strongest and deepest TE corps with Owen Daniels, Tony Scheffler and Marceded Lewis all above average at their position.

Rob Bironas and Josh Brown provide the team with the best pair of kickers in TBL. At DEF/ST the Titans give the Believers a championship caliber unit. Mike Tomlin is one of the games best coaches.

Overall the Beleivers feature one of the league's most complete starting lineups. They should once again challenge for the AFC division crown and make a serious run at a TBL championship.

2009 OUTLOOK

2008 Record

12-5 (2nd place)

Key Additions:

WR Michael Jenkins, WR Chris Henry, DEF/ST Tennessee Titans

Key Losses:

RB Dominic Rhodes, RB Fred Jackson, RB Le'Ron McClain, DEF/ST Tampa Bay Buccaneers

Highest 2009 draft pick:

#7

Needs:

starting RB

2009 Prediction:

11-6 (2nd place)